After discovering interviews with Jack Forbes and David Risling in the UC Davis podcast archives, I felt compelled to continue the discussions and research of Native American graduate students. By providing a digital space to discuss their work, I am producing a series of podcasts that will allow graduate students to talk about their graduate research, highlighting and detailing not only the challenges but the rewards of research, community and graduate school. I look forward to expanding on the wisdom of Jack Forbes and Dave Risling, both prominent scholars in Native American Studies, by continuing the dialogue on the nation building research of graduate students by way of a digital audio file.

https://theforbesfiles.libsyn.com

Yá’át’ééh (Hello)

“My names is Rachael Nez and I am your host for the Forbes Files”

This is my Professors For The Future Project. I produced a series of podcasts encouraging graduate students to talk about their graduate research, highlighting and detailing not only the challenges but the rewards of research, community and graduate school. Through the use of multimedia tools, this graduate student podcast has the capability of reaching a broad audience, both educating and honoring the research of graduate students at University of California, Davis.

TOPICS

- Teaching, First Gen, Graduate School, Research
  - Mechanical Engineering
  - Dawes Act & Land Allotment
- Native American Grave Protection and Repatriation Act
  - Marriage, Property & Native Nations
- Indian Education & Language Revitalization
- Indigenous Representation in Games

Ahé’héé (Thank you)

Teresa Dillinger  •  Ellen Hartigan-O’Connor  •  Ashlee Bird  •  Anthony Burris  •  Destiny Garcia  •  SimHyKinJack  •  Deseréa Langley  •  Spencer Mann  •  Stella Mancillas  •  Aaron Etcheverry